

of 1975 being considered seasonal and, as demonstrated, having been entirely overcome in January, February, and March of 1976).

In terms of quality, one of the most satisfying dividends of the collection development efforts since September 1, 1975, is that the library had acquired as much as 82 percent of non-fiction works listed in the "Notable Books of 1975" compiled by the American Library Association's Reference and Adult Services Division before the list was published (Booklist, Vol. 72, no. 14, March 15, 1976). It appears that the collection development efforts in the State Library, as coordinated and controlled by me during the past seven months, have been largely successful.

However, because of the current book budget freeze, there will not be any further proof for the success in April-June, 1976. Nonetheless, if collection development efforts be continued as have been in the past seven months, we will be able to provide more materials of our own, borrowing less and less from other libraries.
